Creating Memories with Pictures

On December 25th, Christmas Day, my family has a beautiful, but very grateful tradition because of our dogs. My family holds a tradition where we take pictures with our dogs in front of our Christmas tree. This tradition is remarkably important to my family because we have always cherished our dogs like a pot of gold, which makes the tradition particularly special, given that it falls on a day when people celebrate and pledge their gratitude to all the things they are lucky to have.

When my family takes photos with our dogs on Christmas Day, I feel warm inside, most of all, I feel connected to everyone, just like two vines intertwined forever. I feel motivated to be a better person, both inside and out. Even though some people might think our tradition was exceedingly boring, my family has kept it running for 11 years, which is also how long I have been alive! This shows how much my family cares about dogs and having gratitude for the things they own.

When I was younger, I thought that this tradition didn't mean much, but I have learned that it is very important and it can really inspire others to not only appreciate pets, but also be grateful for all of the incredible things they have including, money, housing, food, and the most significant part, love. It also means that if I have kids one day, they will learn too that not everything on Christmas day is about presents, but is also about creating fun things, just like my family, a beautiful tradition.

From my perspective, I think this tradition is unique and astonishing, mainly because just one crazy family and the best three dogs in the world created a tradition that will create the most amazing memories and extraordinary experiences.
